

FDA'S HALL OF SHAME

Per the FDA's mandate, all advertisements of regulated products must be vetted and approved by the FDA prior to their being published in the media.

Over the years, it has been observed that some companies fail to obtain the requisite approval before publishing their adverts. Meanwhile, some companies go through the approval process but publish adverts that are different from the approved versions by adding on to the approved adverts rendering null and void the approval.

Again, the FDA has sought, through various means and fora to get the support of media houses to end the publishing of unapproved adverts.

It is noted that the vetting and approval of adverts are done to guarantee public health and safety by ensuring that manufacturers and sponsors provide the public and consumers with only the truth about their products by neither hiding relevant information (including side effects) nor embellishing the benefits of their products.

This forum would, therefore, serve as FDA's watchdog for regulated products' advertisement that are non-compliant with the FDA's regulations and guidelines on advertisement.

Below are the non-compliant advertisements captured by the FDA Advertisement monitoring team.
